

Christ and Caesar (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Christ and Caesar This book is an enquiry into social obligation and is addressed to all who look for a new world, especially to our fellow Christians. Public calamity, said Burke, is a mighty leveller, and there are occasions when any, even the slightest, chance of doing good must be laid hold on, even by the most inconsiderable person. This may serve as our excuse for an else presumptuous attempt. We cannot well exaggerate the sorrows of this time, for no human imagination can grasp them. After so great sacrifices gladly made and such high hopes formed of the new world after the war the result appears so little worth the price. How comes it that all the good will in the world should be so impotent, and that in spite of all efforts civilisation seems like a great locomotive that has jumped the rails and is now tearing its way down a steep place to destruction? The old lines seem to have been written for our day: Quippe ubi fas versum atque nefas, tot bella per orbem, Tam mult? scelerum fades. Non ullus aratro Dignus honos, squalent abductis arva colonis, Hinc movet Euphrates, illinc Germania bellum; Vicinae ruptis inter se legibus urbes Arma ferunt; saevit toto Mars impius orbe.
